

HIS 6934: Native American History (Readings Seminar)

Dr. Andrew Frank

This course explores the history and historiography of Native Americans from their ancient past until the present. It will focus primarily on the territory that is now the United States, Canada, Mexico, and the Caribbean. The course will examine many of the ethical, methodological, theoretical, and interpretive issues that envelop the field. In particular students will grapple with the competing and overlapping frameworks offered by scholars of settler colonialism, Native and Indigenous studies, and ethnohistory.
